

great many cases where the facts are perfectly simple, dependent upon the testimony of one witness, or two at the best. Hours might be occupied before a jury, while the matter would be disposed of before the court in a few minutes. The putting labor upon the judge is a consideration, I think, hardly to be regarded as worth estimating in such cases. It is only where both the parties desire it, that they are to have this privilege. And if it was an onerous case to the judge, I think the principle of common delicacy would lead them to forbear exercising this privilege. I know that has been the practice. I know that the judge of the court has repeatedly urged counsel not to submit cases of a very serious criminal character, to his decision, when they expressed a desire to do so. And as gentlemen would always do, they have courteously acceded to the judge's request, and have gone before a jury. Now, where there is a very simple case, where much time may be saved, and where both parties desire it, why forbid parties from exercising their option? I confess, that I can see no objection to the section.

Mr. THRUSTON. I think the section will be made less ambiguous by changing the word "and," to the word "or," so that it will read: "but the parties to any cause may, by consent, appoint a proper person to try said case, or may try any cause before the court without the intervention of a jury."

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. That changes the meaning of the sentence somewhat, as I understand it.

Mr. THRUSTON. I do not so understand it. The change I propose would carry the idea of consent into the latter clause more clearly than it now does; and that I suppose is the intention. If it is left as it now stands, the words "by consent," ought to be inserted into this latter clause also.

The question was upon striking out the word "and," and inserting the word "or;" and being taken, it was agreed to.

Mr. NEGLEY. I think this section should not be passed in its present form. This section contemplates a three-judge system. It says, "The legislature shall provide for the trial of causes in case of the disqualification of all the judges of the circuit, &c." Suppose we adopt a one judge system, then we will have to go back and change this.

Mr. SMITH, of Worcester, moved that the convention take a recess; but withdrew the motion at the request of
